By 10 o'clock the sidewalks began to fill, while in the vicinity of the railroad station and about the hotel Scribe the crox'ds constantly increased in size. Small squads of municipal guards, on foot and mounted, were constantly passing, evidence of the fact that the government was taking stringent precautions to prevent trouble. On the Place la Bastille a few Nationalist groups collected, but they were soon dispersed.

By the time the train was due to arrive all the places of vantage about the railroad station and the hotel were packed for the distance of about a block.

Among those gathered at the rail-the French government, and Mr. Kruger bowed his thanks.

Mayor Grebauval then greeted Mr. Kruger in behalf of the municipality of Paris, and the president of the pro-Boer committee and others presented the aged traveler with addresses of welcome, to which Mr. Kruger replied that he was extremely happy to again find himself in the beautiful city of Paris, and asserted that he was touched to the bottom of his heart by the welcome he had received and could not find words to express his appreciation of the sympathy Frenchmen were displaying toward his country. He concluded with saying he had faith in the Boer nation, which, though tempest tossed, would keep afloat and never sink.

greeted Mr. Kruger. Shout after shout arose until there was a continuous roar of cheering. When the Boer president entered the cleared area in front of the hotel the demonstration was uproarous.

Mr. Kruger, bareheaded, bowed on all sides, while the air was rent with cries of vive Kruger; vice les Boers, Mr. Kruger quickly alighted from his carriage and entered the hotel but the mass of spectators was not satisfied, and the people shouted, yelled and clapped their hands in chorus until a window on the balcony was opened and Mr. Kruger appeared. Then hats were again thrown into the air and the shouting was resumed with renewed vigor. Handkerchiefs and flags were waved and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The scene before the hotel continued for over an hour. A body of students, bearing flags, attempted to march past the hotel, but were stopped. Nothing daunted, the students broke into cries and songs until Mr. Kruger again appeared in response to their demonstration, after which he retired for luncheon.

MR. KRUGER'S SPEECH.

WELCOMES KRUGER.

MR. KRUGER'S SPEECH.

Replying to the address of the Paris Boer committee at the railroad station, Mr. Kruger said:

"I am deeply touched by the sympathy the populations of all the French towns I have passed through have displayed towards me by such striking demonstrations. I have seen gathering on my soil thousands of Frenchmen, and I thereby realized that all Frenchmen, like myself, are convinced of the justice of our cause. We are seeking to maintain our independence, feeling that the independence of the people, in itself, guarantees peace. It is in order to obtain this peace, founded on liberty and justice, that we are struggling on the soil of the two republics, and that I myself have come to Europe. Never will I dream of soliciting the least favor of an unjust character. I have clearly proved this by never ceasing to ask for arbitration, and that is what I still demand.

"In order to accomplish this work I rely on the good offices of the people,"

VISIT TO THE ELYSEE.

Just before 4 o'clock a gala landau from the Elysee palace was driven to the Hotel Scribe and Mr. Kruger, his interpreter and M. Crozier proceeded to the Elysee, escorted by a strong detachment of curassiers. The scenes of enthusiasm of the morning were repeated. Mr. Kruger was received at the Elysee with semi-official ceremonies, such as were accorded to the sovereigns who visited the exposition. A battalion of infantry, with its standard and band, drawn up in the court yard, rendered the honors.

President Loubet received Mr. Kruger in the hall of the ambassadors, where M. Delcasse, the minister of foreign affairs, was also awaiting him. The interview lasted five minutes. Mr. Kruger then returned to his hotel with the same ceremonial.

The people have caught the craze that has served to make this game so popular wherever it has been played. It is more than probable that the Virginia-North Carolina game will be carried out annually on a Norfolk gridlinon in the future. The managers of the two teams are delighted with the reception accorded them. They have nothing but praise for the systematic manner in which Mayor Johnson took the crowd in hand and maintained the most perfect order on the field. Not a single person encroached upon the field of play who did not have the red field badge. The spectators were extremely orderly even in the highest pitches of their enthusiasm. The city is proud of the fact that she has been able to adapt herself to such a new sensation as a big football game without the least signs of green appearing; that she has been able to conduct herself like an old stager at such affairs.

The Monticello was the scene of great activity all during the morning. Crowds of people were continually passing through the lobby, anxious to get a glimpse of the players. The colors of both teams were more in evidence than they were the night before, and everybody seemed billed with an air of expectancy. Every now and then one or two of the players could be seen sauntering quietly and nonchalantly along through the lobby. They seemed by far the most unconcerned of all present.

The spectacle on Main and Granby broke into cries and songs until Mr.
Kruger again appeared in response to their demonstration, after which he retired for luncheon.

AN INSPIRING SIGHT.

A sight which stirred the feelings of the crowd to the utmost was the appearance on the balcony of the greatgrandchildren of Mr. Kruger waving a Boer flag. The little ones were cheered to the echo as, held aloft by a servant, they unfurled the Boer colors. Through all this fervid welcome the anti-British sentiment did not appear. The cries were confined to plaudits of Mr. Kruger and the Boers. If there were any shouts opposed to Great Britain they were not heard in the general tumuit. There was but one incident having any resemblance of this sort. Opposite the hotel is an English store and on its balcony stood many spectators. When Mr. Kruger appeared on the balcony of the hotel some one in the crowd noticed that the men on the store balcony wore their hats. Immediately a cry of "hats off" was directed at them, and the men on the balcony, appreciating the sinuation, uncovered. The vessel was released and started

The Orange and Blue triumphed in he great football game for the chambionship of the South, at League Park resterday. Fully six thousand people aw them defeat the North Carolina learn in a desperately fought battle, and all agree that there is no disgrace introduced to the defeat of the Carolina learns. Three times did the Virginia learn carry the ball over the North of the colors. There seemed to be just samply white and blue flags as there was the signal for one of the greatest outbursts of enthusiasm ever seen on a Southern gridron. They engaged in a short signal practice for a while, and the crowd critically scrutinized their make-up.

Carolina was only five minutes behind the Virginia of the colors. There seemed to be just samply white and blue flags as there stands and bleachers fairly scintillated. yesterday. Fully six thousand people saw them defeat the North Carolina team in a desperately fought battle, and all agree that there is no disgrace attached to the defeat of the Carolinteam carry the ball over the North state goal line, and Coleman kicked goal twice. The final score was seventeen to nothing. It cannot be said that Virginia had a walk-over. Never did any team fight harder than the defeated eleven. They were outclassed in every respect, however, and while they put up a stiff opposition, even being able to seriously endanger the Virginia goal on more than one occasion, the fact that the orange and blue team is their superior does not become less apparent. Norfolk is football wild. The people have caught the craze that has served to make this game so pop-

The spectacle on Main and Granby streets reminded one of Christmas eve. Horns were freely brought into play and flags and streamers were seen in countless numbers. The small boy was in his seventh heaven, and made the streets resound with his noise as only yesterday was the almost even division of the colors. There seemed to be just as many white and blue flags as there were orange and blue. Outside the ropes on the eastern side was the carriage stand, and it was packed. Traps of all kinds, tally-hos, run-abouts, hacks, victorias, and every sort of known vehicle was represented, even to the automobile, and all were gaily decorated with the colors which their occupants favored.

caused by the lack of adequate street car accommodations, but as all know that the recent fire at the power house badly handicapped the trolley people, blame cannot be attached to them. As it was, express wagons and carry-alls hauled a large part of the crowd. The cars that were running came in for their share also.

The grand stand, the bleachers and the side lines were packed to overflowing, and the fair sex was not in any way poorly represented.

LAST NIGHT.

The scene last night on the streets and at the hotels does not allow description. The successful "rooters" were unable to control themselves. The Virginia yells resounded from one end of the town to the other and, verily, there was a "hot time." The visitors practically owned the city, and they certainly took possession of it. As the Monticello was the headquarters of the two teams the major part of the crowd was to be seen there. The lobby was filled with an indescribable mass of howing, yelling humanity. Orange and blue was attached to everythias, from jackets of the maldens, the lapels of the seciate men, the canes and horns of the "rooters," and on the collar of the big yellow dow. The white and blue was also in evidence, for the Old North State will never furl her colors, and while Virginia has revenge for her defeat in 1898, the Carolina boys are already thinking, of the time one year from now, when once more with the Virginias will they do battle royal on the striped field.

Washington, Nov. 24.—Officials familiar with South American affairs state that attention is again being given in Venezuela to the project of the transfer of the Island of Ciracae, belonging to Dutch Guinana, and lying off the coast of Venezuela, to Germany. The islands came into notice during the Spanish-American war, as it was the point chosen by Admiral Cervera for making a stop when his squadron was enroute to Santiago. It is understood that the acquisition has been discussed from time to time in Germany, meeting with considerable favor, being considered a transfer which could be made by cession from one European government to another.
